[Effects of N-glycanase on cultured lymphocytes]. N-glycanase was produced by sonication of a bacterial strain which produces N-glycanase. The enzyme product obtained by this method had a specific activity of 8,300 U/mg. The purified enzyme was almost homogenous with regard to gel filtration and electro-phoresis. There was no stimulation of [3H]glucosamine incorporation in the presence of dolichyl phosphate in intact lymphocytes and mononuclear cells; however, it significantly stimulated the incorporation in the presence of dolichyl phosphate in the swollen lymphocytes. The swelling lymphocytes increased their incorporation in the presence of dolichyl phosphate in the culture medium. The swelling activity was reduced by treating the swollen lymphocytes with N-glycanase in culture for one hour. There were significant increases in the [3H]glucosamine incorporation in the swollen lymphocytes in the presence of dolichyl phosphate. Glucosamine or mannosamine, but not galactose or fucose, at 50 micrograms/ml inhibited the swelling activity. The swelling activity was also inhibited by actinomycin D. It was suggested that the inhibition of the swelling of lymphocytes by N-glycanase in culture was associated with the inhibition of protein synthesis by actinomycin D.Q: How to solve the error of 'WITH ROLLUP' in (SQL Server) I have a following query which shows total of 3 different projects. The New Americanism The New Americanism (1923) is a book by Sinclair Lewis, a journalist and author who became the first president of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Maryland. Background Lewis was a popular author who was best known for his satirical novels dealing with American life during the 1920s. It was while he was studying at Yale under the tutelage of John Emerich Edward Dalberg-Acton, 2nd Baron Acton that the then-University professor and historian John Dewey's philosophy and activism heavily influenced him to write what would become his most influential works to date, namely It Can't Happen Here (1935) and Kingsblood Royal (1936). Summary The New Americanism is a harsh condemnation of American values during the era of the United States which Lewis identifies as a time of great "false comfort", a period of complete denial of problems due to misplaced optimism. He talks about a new generation of people, who deal with materialism, sex and religion in a corrupt, immoral and selfish way while pretending not to notice anything about what is going on around them. The most active participants in this lifestyle are the graduates of Ivy League universities and, as Lewis puts it, "they believe a lot of things, but believe no things." The book also attacks the English language which Lewis associates with hypocrisy and materialism. He also warns against the cycle of false comfort and subsequent discomfort that people of a culture have been subject to throughout history. Reception The New Americanism was praised for its style and the spiritual relevance of its subject, but some critics found its ultimate message to be dark and pessimistic. The Chicago Tribune called it "a thoughtful, troubled look at the present American scene", and that "he is a student and an observer of human nature in all its pathological manifestations." The New York Times states that despite its subject, "the book is particularly well done". The New York Sun found it to be "direct, vigorous, and often amusing", and that "it is as alive as any critical book today. Not since George Jean Nathan's Field, Paper and Scissors has there been such a raucous and wonderful good old American brawl. Some writers only write good. Mr. Lewis is one of those."
