If WebDAV is enabled, is there a way to get to emails on Hotmail? I am searching all over the place, but I can't find anything, and now I am trying to test my theory. Can someone help? A: You can use the WebDAV connector of Windows Live Mail to connect to your webmail account via the hotmail.com server. You'll have to create a hotmail.com user under your hotmail account, as the connection will be made through a WebDAV protocol. Of course, this won't give you a read-only access to your Hotmail messages, just a client that can connect to your mail. I guess it's a good way to try and test your email client with a real mail server. A: Outlook Web Access is the webmail interface that most people are familiar with. It isn't 100% up to date with the 'old' webmail systems. WebDAV is the browser protocol that the email client uses to connect to the webmail server. You can use Outlook Web Access to communicate with your email account. You can add the address webmail.hotmail.com as an 'On-line Account'. Or you can use Hotmail Connector to connect to your account. It is based on WebDAV but is limited in what it can do. Also it is not up to date with the new standards for webmail. In manufacturing a semiconductor device, the testing of semiconductor elements before and after assembly is conducted. There is a type in which the semiconductor elements are tested before being assembled in a semiconductor device. Japanese Patent Laying-Open No. 6-159395 (Patent Document 1) proposes a testing method of this type. Specifically,
