Q: Template specialization of an abstract class template member template I would like to write a class template that consists of an abstract member template. This member template has one more template parameter but a different, yet specializable base class as follows: template class A> class MyTemplate: public A { public: typedef typename A::MyType MyType; MyType Bar(T& x) { ... } }; I would then want to specialize this class template for a specific subclass: template class A> class MyTemplate: public A { public: typedef typename A::MyType MyType; MyType Bar(T& x) { ... } }; However, this does not work. Is there any way to use a subclass specialization without introducing an A as a base class in MyTemplate?
